The Family CyberHero Checklist

Ten habits that keep a family safe online. Go through them together, tick off the ones you already do, and pick one to start this week. Being safe online isn't about knowing more than your kids — it's about agreeing on a few things, out loud.

- [ ] 01 Every account gets its own password
  No repeats. And none of them is a birthday, a pet's name, or a family name — those are the first things anyone would guess.

- [ ] 02 We know where our important things are saved
  Photos, schoolwork, anything we'd hate to lose lives in two places, not one.

- [ ] 03 New people get checked with a grown-up first
  Someone being friendly online isn't the same as someone being known. We check first, every time.

- [ ] 04 Our home Wi-Fi has a password on it
  And the network name doesn't announce our family name to the street.

- [ ] 05 A message in a hurry gets a slow answer
  If something wants us to click or share right now, that's exactly when we stop and ask.

- [ ] 06 Nothing gets installed without asking
  Any app, any game, any device — a grown-up says yes first. No exceptions.

- [ ] 07 We know who can see our shared folders
  A grown-up checks the sharing settings on family albums and drives.

- [ ] 08 Some things stay private, always
  Home address, birthday, school name, phone number. These aren't secrets to be ashamed of — they're just ours.

- [ ] 09 You can tell me anything, and you won't be in trouble
  If something online feels wrong, telling a grown-up is always the right move — even if a rule got broken getting there.

- [ ] 10 Keeping our digital home safe is everyone's job
  Not just the grown-ups'. Everyone here has a part in it.

"Every CyberHero starts somewhere."

You don't have to do all ten at once. Pick the one you're not doing yet, and start there. — Maya & Noah

Our family agreement

We talked about these together, and we agreed on them together. If something online ever feels wrong, we tell each other — no one gets in trouble for asking.
